What I Wish I Had Known About Economic Development, an ELGL Panel

Economic Development, while being vital to cities of any size, is often misunderstood in its role serving local government. Equal parts art and science, business and politics, policy and community development, the daily grind for your economic development staff is often very different from others at City Hall. During this session, you will hear from a variety of leaders in this field, from local government to the private sector on what they wish they had known about economic development, and how it can help your city succeed in creating a diverse and sustainable future.

*Moderator: Sheryl Trent, SBrand Consulting LLC, Fort Collins, CO
N. Zach Ratkai, Economic Development Manager, City of Richland, WA
Rich Werner, President & CEO, Upstate Colorado EDC
Ryley Iverson, Founder, Townfolio, Saskatoon, SK, Canada
Richard Sales, Town Administrator, Town of Palisade, CO*

More Tales from the Range: Learning from the Good, the Bad and the Ugly

CCCMA's Senior Advisors will share the general themes and refrains they are hearing from across the state. Is manager turnover slowing down? Is there a pattern or writing on the wall? How are emerging managers successfully transitioning to managers? Are there tried and true steps? Are personnel or council issues plaguing everyone!? ALL names will be changed for anonymity.

Mark Achen, Penny Culbreth-Graft, Tim Gagen, Craig Kocian, Lee Merkel, and Greg Schulte will be part of this session and also available for individual appointments. Sign up available in mid-January.

Being the CEO of Your Own Career

Mindset is powerful. Imagine the benefits of treating your career as a 1-person corporation, with you as the president. Find out why this makes sense, and how to make that mental shift. Learn to apply “Noble Selfishness,” “DO vs. do,” and “Confident Humility.” Gregg Piburn, an independent consultant for 26 years, is President of Leader’s Edge Consulting. He gets a real kick out of helping people get on with what they’re good at and excited about. He has provided facilitative training, facilitation, and personal coaching for more than 40 municipalities in Colorado, Wyoming, and North Carolina.

Best Practices are the Enemy of Innovation

The problem with best practices is that they often merely masquerade as innovation. But a cut-and-paste approach to better government is emblematic of status-quo thinking, the "we've-always-done-it-that-way" mindset that serves as a powerful deterrent to meaningful change. This session shows how progressive government leaders are taking a sharp pivot away from best practices and toward "next practices" in their efforts to build stronger, more effective organizations.

Patrick Ibarra is co-founder and partner of the Mejorando Group, an organizational effectiveness consulting firm that brings fresh thinking, innovation, and next practices to help governments succeed in the 21st century.

Controlling the Message: Media Relations for local governments without a PIO

More and more these days, cities and towns need to rely on a variety of media to convey not only community news, but also market themselves and their mission. However, many cities either do not have a full-time public information staff or find it difficult to share their message in the ever-decreasing traditional media. In this session, an experienced PIO and an accidental PIO will share their stories, wisdom, and strategies on how best to build relationships with the media and your community in order to get the best possible message out.

The session will touch not only on media relations, but also controlling the message through your own social media channels such as Facebook, Nextdoor and Twitter.
